

Business has always seemed a subject that could equip me with the skills required to turn a project into reality, whilst giving me the leeway to do what I enjoy most: be creative, with that creativity informing my choices. Coming from a family of business owners, I have been exposed to the multiple departments that encompass it. Whilst I enjoyed the different roles, marketing was certainly the department that most closely aligned with my interests, tapping into the people aspect of business, and giving life to ideas through visual representation.

It is primarily my strong foundation in this subject which confirmed my decision to pursue it in higher education. I have not only studied Business HL for two years, which gave me an understanding of its basic concepts, but I have also made choices which have put me in touch with the industry. I have attended and been part of multiple model UN events, such as MUN 1 in Year, MUN 2 in Year and MUN 3 in Year. A particular role I hold dearly was PR Officer for the MUN held at Location. As part of the Public Relations Secretariat, I increased the visibility of the event by reaching out to similar conferences to offer a mutually beneficial agreement whereby they advertised to us, whilst we did the same with our audience for them. This initiative showed me the power of people relations in this field, especially through how it transformed the project as it created an 'External Observer' committee for external individuals who wished to participate.

My suitability is also shown by my ability to apply concepts to real-world scenarios to come up with critical conclusions. For example, in my business Internal Assessment, I took advantage of popular affairs as I investigated how the collaboration and marketing strategies of Name, the collective name of Film 1 and Film 2, led to the success of both movies. Working on this assignment allowed me to conduct extensive research on this collaboration based on these organizations' documents and articles. I found out that the collaboration significantly helped both productions by providing additional publicity and increasing their box office revenue. Working on other business projects during my three years of studying this subject allowed me not only to learn more than the basic knowledge of this field, but also allowed me to develop my skills, such as researching credible sources, planning, and dealing with the creative side of business, while maintaining the aesthetics of my work.

Nonetheless, what makes me stand out is my passion for creativity and the arts. I have danced competitively for Number years, attending Number summer camps and winning multiple awards, as well as acting in six theatre performances, including at the Theatre and the Theatre in Location. Similarly, I can paint, draw, play the piano and the guitar, and sew - a skill I have used to make my own sweatshirts and bags. Even more, as an active individual, I have also practised acrobatics, gymnastics, skiing, and windsurfing. My varied background shows how I am resourceful and always open to learning new skills. However, the biggest value is that I bring a diverse background with interesting new perspectives. I have explored my interests and the different ways to express myself, and I am confident in my ability to do so in the realm of business, particularly when focusing on marketing.

If accepted into your university, I will bring passion, engagement, and experience to the student body. Having proven my dedication to chasing my interests, I am ready to take advantage of this opportunity to form myself as a future leader in business.
