

Business, ultimately, is about adding value and possessing the perseverance to continue to do so amid ever-changing circumstances. That virtue combined with the ability to work in a creative and unconstrained manner is what excites me about this domain and perfectly suits my dual artistic-entrepreneurial personality.

In order to prepare for a career in business, I follow the words of my father, a self-made businessman, “To be a good businessman means to be a little good at everything”. Thus, I have sought to experiment and develop in different spheres of life to become a well-rounded person. Indeed, in the last five years I chose IB due to the variety of subjects it offers, became a two-times laureate of Competition Name, became a three-times class vice-president (Year-Year), passed the Extracurricular exam, and attended the Company Name’s French language summer camp in Location, where I achieved a B2 proficiency level and exchanged cultural experiences with individuals from various backgrounds.

Furthermore, having volunteered in various projects, I have developed the organisational and interpersonal skills which are fundamental for any businessperson. Of these, the most precious one was the Conference Name held at the Location. Personally, sharing with women who have left their mark in the market empowered me to follow my path of seeking to create something of my own. Similarly, I have also engaged in activities which share the very mission of business – to shape the world around me. Namely, I helped organise solidarity actions for Africa, Nepal and most recently Ukraine, where I coordinated my community to bring items deemed essential in a humanitarian crisis.

Nonetheless, what consolidated business as my choice, was being an actual part of it. During my internship at Company Name, I engaged in various tasks through which explored how different roles work together for a common aim. For example, I organised the company’s integration trip, which included comparing prices, organising logistics and ordering the required equipment. Additionally, I created databases for staff initiatives and supported the recruitment unit by attending interviews with potential candidates and collecting the necessary data to facilitate efficient decision making.

Similarly, as an intern at Company Name, I gained valuable insight into the inner workings of a fully digital business. I learned to utilise social media as a corporate tool, designed and created content through editing programs like DaVinci Resolve, with one of my creations reaching over 300k views, as well as managed audience engagement to benefit from the algorithm. This role showed me the importance of developing a recognisable brand that stands out and to foster a responsive community around you.

The above-mentioned experiences, combined with my entrepreneurial drive and well-rounded profile, make me confident that I will be a great addition to your university. As a motivated person that has already shown her commitment to this course, I intend to make my university proud and leave my mark in business to one day be an example for the next generation of young women interested in pursuing a career in this field.
