

I characterise myself as possessing innate ability to organize and lead, whether it was organizing plays and concerts with friends or overseeing various tasks during group activities. This inclination towards management and leadership has remained a constant in my life. Thus, I have set my sights on studying Business Administration and Management at a prestigious university, believing that this course will not only satisfy my passion but also hone my leadership skills further. I envision myself as a successful and customer-oriented manager, and I am confident that the appropriate studies will equip me with the necessary tools to excel in this role.

Dance, particularly ballet, has been another integral part of my life. Over the past ten years, I have devoted myself to this art at Carmina Ocaña Ballet School, which have not only enriched my understanding of self but have also taught me invaluable lessons in patience and performing under pressure. These experiences have prepared me for the challenges of university life, where I expect to encounter various demanding situations.

As for my educational background, I consciously chose to pursue the IB Programme for its unique blend of subjects and emphasis on skill development. This program exposed me to a diverse range of subjects, from languages to natural sciences, and fostered open-mindedness and critical thinking. It also taught me time management, prioritization, and effective coping with deadlines. For my TOK, explored the concept of "truth" in different areas such as Maths and History, teaching me the importance of now accepting everything at face value, and explore the different perspectives available even in concepts that seemingly appear black and white.

Furthermore, I have been deeply involved in volunteering activities, particularly through the Creativity, Action, and Service (CAS) program. I actively support animal protection and philanthropic organizations improving the lives of strays such as ANDA and Fundación El Arca de Noé, currently serving as a youth council member the latter. These experiences have instilled in me a sense of social responsibility and a commitment to helping those in need.

Sports have also been an integral part of my life, with volleyball being a particular favorite. I have joined my local volleyball team, participating in various championships, and learning valuable lessons in teamwork and effective performance under pressure. I am eager to explore the sporting facilities available at university and continue my athletic pursuits.

In addition to my academic and extracurricular activities, I have gained practical work experience, including a placement at the kitchen furniture company Iconno Madrid, where I gained insights into the inner workings of a business. This experience highlighted the gap between theoretical knowledge and practical application, teaching me the importance of adaptability and problem-solving.

In conclusion, my diverse experiences, strong work ethic, and passion for management make me a promising candidate for admission to a prestigious university. I look forward to the challenges and opportunities that lie ahead in my pursuit of Business Administration and Management studies.
